Chapter 24
The Integration of Entertainment and Advertising: Advertainment

R. Gulay Ozturk
İstanbul Commerce University, Turkey

ABSTRACT

The evolution of the advertising industry’s promotional practices remains in a state of constant transition as technological advances steadily continue to shape, transform, and cultivate the digitally integrated landscape of today’s modern world. The fusion of advertising and entertainment, known in the industry as advertainment, is becoming an increasingly popular method that marketers use to connect with consumers (Millili, 2012). Today, the sense of entertainment of target audiences has been changed by new communication technologies. This study discusses the “entertainment concept” in terms of advertainment typology and technology in the world. Therefore, this chapter presents the changing of entertainment from the point of advertising and technology.

INTRODUCTION

As traditional means of delivering advertising messages lose their ability to reach and effectively communicate with those target audiences judged most desirable by advertisers, the need for alternative vehicles for communication becomes more urgent (Scott, p.365). Media and audience fragmentation, advertising avoidance and technological evolutions such as digital television, the personal video recorder, Web 2.0 applications and user-generated content, make it increasingly difficult to reach and convince consumers with traditional campaigns. Therefore, commercial communications is increasingly using advertising formats that can break through the perceptual barrier and can be potentially more convincing than traditional advertising media. Examples of these new formats are hybrid advertising techniques such as brand placement, branded entertainment, advertainment or branded content, plugs, sponsored magazines and advergames (Pelsmacker and Neijens, 2009).

The term advertainment, now standard in advertising trade, describes forms of entertainment that act as marketing vehicles in addition to attracting audiences for spot advertisers. Advertainment exceeds product placement in its degree of conflation between the advertising and entertainment industries and in the creation
The Integration of Entertainment and Advertising

The term advertainment was coined to reflect the increasingly intertwined connections between advertising and entertainment. It refers to promotional practices that integrate brand communications within the content of entertainment products (Wasko et al., 1993). The aim of advertainment is to make ads themselves so entertaining, or so useful, that people want to watch them (http://www.prenhall.com, 2013). Brand communications are now present in the content of a broad range of entertainment vehicles, including TV and movies (Wasko et al., 1993), radio shows, songs and music videos, video games, plays, and even novels (Friedman, 1985). The increased mingling of advertising with the entertainment world has generated a slew of newly coined terms to reflect these trends, such as hybrid advertisement (Balasubraminan, 1994) or the “Madison and Vine” expression, reflecting the physical intersection of the advertising industry’s New York City Hub on Vine Street (Russell, 2007).

Accordingly, advertainment has grown mainly in reaction to the increasing advertising clutter, escalating advertising costs, and the reduced effectiveness of traditional advertising messages. Consumers are exponentially exposed to commercial messages but at the same time they are finding new ways to avoid them. An In-Stat/MDR survey found that 54.3% of consumers claim to skip 75-100% of commercials. In 2004, a Knowledge Networks study concluded that 47% of viewers switch channels while watching TV5 (Jaffe, 2005).

The above statistics do not account for the impact of new technological advances which are giving consumers more control over how they consume entertainment, and making it increasingly easy for them to avoid commercial messages. With the introduction of Personal Video Recorders/DVRs, such as TiVo or Replay TV, consumers can not only more easily fast-forward through commercials but they can now also easily skip them altogether with a PVR’s auto-skip function (Russell, 2007). So advertisers are looking at alternatives such as branded entertainment within Related Content

Preservation of Indigenous Knowledge Systems in Zimbabwe: Some Ethical Considerations Mass Tapfuma (2017). Handbook of Research on Social, Cultural, and Educational Considerations of Indigenous Knowledge in Developing Countries (pp. 244-258).
www.irma-international.org/chapter/preservation-of-indigenous-knowledge-systems-in-zimbabwe/167484/

Risk, Activism, and Empowerment: Women’s Breast Cancer in Venezuela www.irma-international.org/article/risk-activism-and-empowerment/139199/

Problematising “Lad Culture”: Defining and Tackling “Laddism” in UK Universities www.irma-international.org/chapter/problematising-lad-culture/180551/

Integrating Culture in Language Preparatory Programs: From the Perspectives of Native and Non-Native English Instructors in Turkey www.irma-international.org/chapter/integrating-culture-in-language-preparatory-programs/231356/

The Wisconsin Spring Revisited
www.irma-international.org/article/the-wisconsin-spring-revisited/146230/