

Chapter 2

Human Trafficking in Tanzania:

A Review of Victim Protection Policy in Tanzania and Recommendations

Godfrey Mpandikizi

Tanzania Anti-Human Trafficking and Legal Initiatives, Tanzania

ABSTRACT

Human trafficking is an issue that affects vulnerable individuals across the world, and Tanzania is no exception. The country has long been a source, transit, and destination for human trafficking, particularly for women and children who are exploited and used for forced labor, sexual exploitation, forced military servitude, and organ trafficking. Despite Tanzania's efforts to combat trafficking in persons in all of its forms, it remains classified as a Tier 2 country by the United States Department of State's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report. This classification indicates that while the government has made significant efforts to address human trafficking, it does not fully meet the minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. In the fight against human trafficking, Tanzania's approach, like many countries globally, focuses on three pillars of combating trafficking in persons: prevention, prosecution, and protection. All three pillars are necessary to help eliminate the sources of trafficking, support survivors, and hold traffickers accountable for their crimes.

DOI: 10.4018/979-8-3693-0327-6.ch002

INTRODUCTION

Human trafficking is a serious abuse of human rights that still happens all over the world. Tanzania is a good example of this problem. The fact that Tanzania is a country that traffics people and is also a transit and destination spot for many of them, especially women and children, shows how hard it is to fight this problem. People are taken advantage of in many ways, such as through forced labour, sexual abuse, military service, and even organ trafficking. The Tanzanian government has made some great efforts, as shown by its Tier 2 ranking in the US Department of State's Trafficking in Persons (TIP) Report. However, there is still a long way to go before they fully meet the basic standards for ending trafficking. This gap is especially clear when it comes to protecting survivors and helping them get back on their feet, which is an area where present strategies are seriously lacking.

The goal of this chapter is to take a close look at this study gap by looking at it through the lens of making victim protections stronger in Tanzania. The Tanzanian strategy, like global strategies, is based on three pillars: prevention, prosecution, and protection. However, the third pillar, protection, needs to be looked at again and strengthened right away. This reevaluation is necessary not only to get rid of the things that lead to trafficking, but also to help survivors more and hold traffickers responsible. The goal of this chapter is to give a full picture of how Tanzania helps survivors of human trafficking by looking at its legal resources, humanitarian aid, and security programmes. It will also look at what has worked and what hasn't in its ongoing fight against human trafficking.

To properly handle survivor protections in Tanzania's human trafficking policy, one must first learn a great deal about the history of trafficking in the country. To do this, Tanzania's present government, extralegal, and international policies against trafficking need to be looked into. This chapter will give these policies a critical review, pointing out their flaws and offering ways to make them better. It will also find ways to improve the measures that have already been tried and tested and suggest them. In the end, this chapter wants to add to the conversation about human trafficking by giving a more detailed view of Tanzania's efforts. This will help policymakers and practitioners make better decisions about how to protect and rehabilitate survivors.

In this chapter, "Human Trafficking in Tanzania: A Review of Victim Protection Policy in Tanzania and Recommendations to Transition from Tier 2 to Tier 1 Under the Trafficking Victims Protection Act Country Standards," Godfrey Mpandikizi offers an in-depth analysis of the challenges and progress in Tanzania's fight against human trafficking. The chapter unfolds as follows:

Background of Human Trafficking in Tanzania: This section delves into the prevalence of human trafficking in various regions of Tanzania, highlighting the 20 more pages are available in the full version of this document, which may be purchased using the "Add to Cart" button on the publisher's webpage: www.igi-global.com/chapter/human-trafficking-in-tanzania/341493

Related Content

Exploring Reconciliation Prospects Amidst Identity and Governance Crisis in Manipur

Jyothis Mary (2024). Economic and Societal Impact of Organized Crime: Policy and Law Enforcement Interventions (pp. 173-195).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/exploring-reconciliation-prospects-amidst-identity-and-governance-crisis-in-manipur/341499

Law Enforcement Officer Suicide

Daniel W. Clark and Elizabeth K. White (2019). Police Science: Breakthroughs in Research and Practice (pp. 431-452).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/law-enforcement-officer-suicide/219489

Money Laundering: A Thought-Provoking Crime

Sadia Saeed, Fauzia Mubarik and Sehar Zulfiqar (2021). Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing in Global Financial Systems (pp. 1-29).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/money-laundering/274814

The Transient State of Habitually Convicted Criminal Offenders

Kenny A. Hendrickson and Kula A. Francis (2021). Global Perspectives on Reforming the Criminal Justice System (pp. 182-201).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/the-transient-state-of-habitually-convicted-criminal-offenders/285729

Compliance Monitoring and Testing Seismometer to Detect Compliquake

Sachin Shah (2021). Money Laundering and Terrorism Financing in Global Financial Systems (pp. 238-260).

www.irma-international.org/chapter/compliance-monitoring-and-testing-seismometer-to-detect-compliquake/274824