

Transforming Modern Computing With Quantum and AI: Vision and Challenges

Emir Sahin Hatay

 <https://orcid.org/0009-0003-0240-9854>

University of Essex, UK

Muhammed Golec

 <https://orcid.org/0000-0003-0146-9735>

Queen Mary University of London, UK

Sukhpal Singh Gill

 <https://orcid.org/0000-0002-3913-0369>

Queen Mary University of London, UK

ABSTRACT

Modern computing systems are undergoing rapid transformation through theoretical advances and technical innovations. This article explores the technological and application trends in quantum-driven artificial intelligence (AI) innovations. The authors explore the mathematical frameworks underlying AI and quantum computing systems, with a particular focus on the role of algebraic topology in quantum circuit optimization and error correction. From neural networks to transformers, they investigate how AI architectures are reshaping computational capabilities, such as in healthcare, autonomous systems, and real-time computing. They highlight key hardware advances such as 3D stacked memory, neuromorphic chips, and quantum computing integration. They identify key challenges and limitations by focusing on ethical considerations, computation constraints, and scaling issues. This article looks ahead at research in quantum and AI, highlighting emerging technologies, potential breakthroughs and emerging trends, and spotlighting technological convergence and research trajectories.

KEYWORDS

Artificial Intelligence, Machine Learning, Modern Computing, Quantum AI, Quantum Computing

1. INTRODUCTION

The birth of artificial intelligence (AI) as a field can be based on the Dartmouth Conference in 1956, when it was proposed as the basic concept of machines that can process and learn from data (Krauss, 2024). At this conference, pioneers such as John McCarthy and Marvin Minsky are known as the fathers of AI because of the pivotal role they played in determining AI as a separate field of study (Rajaraman, 2014).

Early theoretical frameworks focused on symbolic reasoning and rule-based systems but were limited by the computational capabilities of the time. It was considered an amazing potential breakthrough in 1986 when David E. Rumelhart, Geoffrey E. Hinton, and Ronald J. Williams introduced the concept of using gradient descent to minimize error in neural networks in their publication on

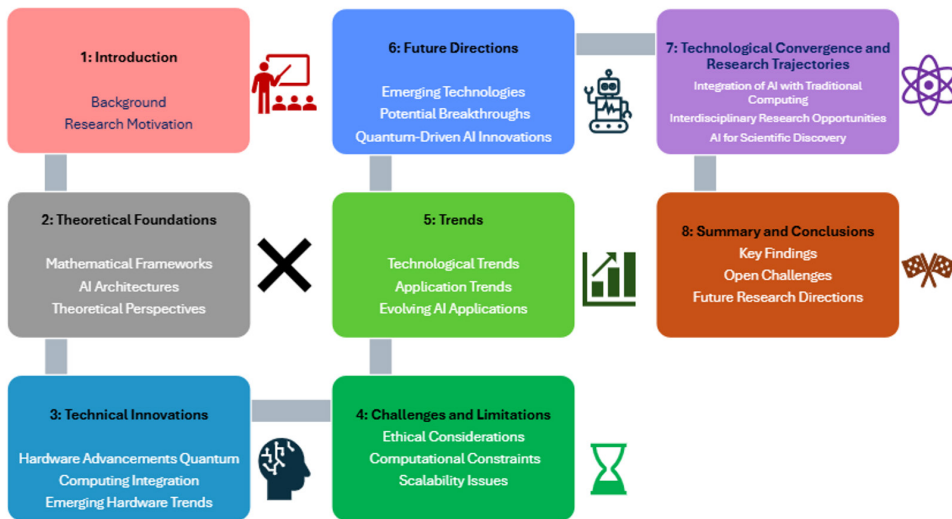

DOI: 10.4018/IJITPM.379718

This article published as an Open Access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License (<http://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/>) which permits unrestricted use, distribution, and production in any medium, provided the author of the original work and original publication source are properly credited.

“learning representations by back-propagating errors” (Rumelhart et al., 1986). Although initial advances were limited by computational capabilities, with the emergence of mathematical frameworks and advanced hardware architectures in the 1990s, it has not only remained stable in computational capabilities but has also begun to be able to translate theoretical possibilities into practical applications (Hendler et al., 1990). A new era was ushered in the early 2000s with the introduction of deep learning architectures and complex tensor operations that enable systems to process complex data patterns with unmatched accuracy (Gill, Xu, et al., 2022). The convergence of AI and modern computing significantly accelerates development in many areas. These innovations range from new mathematical frameworks to hardware configurations, quantum computing, cloud computing, and distributed systems (Golec, Hatay, Golec, et al., 2024). Modern computing is performing complex calculations and data analysis at influential speed rates that are difficult for classical systems to manage. On the other hand, new approaches to system architecture and hardware design continue to push the limits of computational capability (Golec & Gill, 2024; Golec, Hatay, Golec, et al., 2024).

Figure 1 shows the organisation of the paper and spotlights the main topics and subheadings it focused on. This paper analyses the transformation of modern computing and the innovations that will emerge with the AI-quantum integration. We explore the technological and application trends for quantum-driven AI innovations and identify key challenges and limitations by focusing on ethical considerations, computation constraints, and scaling issues. Finally, we spotlight technological convergence and research trajectories, as well as emerging technologies, potential breakthroughs, and emerging trends.

Figure 1. The organization of the paper

2. THEORETICAL FOUNDATIONS

Modern computational science and the technological progress it has led to are based on the theoretical foundations of AI and modern computer systems (Mehta et al., 2023). Connecting abstract mathematical concepts and their practical applications in concrete world systems, the theoretical foundations examine the mathematical frameworks and architectural principles that underpin modern AI systems (Gill et al., 2024). This provides the tools needed to understand and design AI algorithms, and efficiency and scalability of applications (Do et al., 2020). Finally, we pointed out ethical considerations and computational constraints in various technological developments. The 14 more pages are available in the full version of this document, which may be purchased using the "Add to Cart" button on the publisher's webpage: www.igi-global.com/article/transforming-modern-computing-with-quantum-and-ai/379718

Related Content

An Assessment for IT Project Maturity Levels

Bersam Bolat, Asl Kudemir, pek Ceren Usluand Gül Tekin Temur (2017). International Journal of Information Technology Project Management (pp. 1-16). www.irma-international.org/article/an-assessment-for-it-project-maturity-levels/177288

Trends in Management of TI Projects and CEO Competence

Alexandra María López-Sevillano, Flor Nancy Díaz-Piraquiveand Rubén González Crespo (2020). Handbook of Research on Project Management Strategies and Tools for Organizational Success (pp. 19-48). www.irma-international.org/chapter/trends-in-management-of-ti-projects-and-ceo-competence/247362

Collaborative Technology and Dimensions of Team Cognition: Test of a Second-Order Factor Model

Hayward P. Andres (2013). International Journal of Information Technology Project Management (pp. 22-37). www.irma-international.org/article/collaborative-technology-and-dimensions-of-team-cognition/80403

Methodology and Rationalization of Work

(2025). Project Management Maturity Models for Organizational Performance (pp. 79-98). www.irma-international.org/chapter/methodology-and-rationalization-of-work/372947

High Performance Teams: Do Perceptions and Reality Match?

Caroline Dominguez, Isabel C. Mouraand João Varajão (2016). International Journal of Information Technology Project Management (pp. 72-82). www.irma-international.org/article/high-performance-teams/150536